

```

1  #include <iostream>
2  #include "Fib_Tree.h"
3
4
5
6  //////////////////////////////////////
7  //                                METHODS
8  //////////////////////////////////////
9
10
11 // Constructor - Initially it's "empty" 12
13 Tree::Tree(void) {
14     root = nullptr;
15     size = 0;
16     depth = 0;
17     leafs = 0;
18 }
19
20
21 //**
22
23 // Destructor: wraps another method 'empty' (see below).
24 // It is probably unnecessary because through the pointers that link
25 // the nodes each node will call its own destructor (if the structure
26 // has one). Scanning the Tree recursively is for extra safety.
27
28
29 Tree::~~Tree(void) {
30     empty(root);
31 }
32
33
34 //**
35
36 // Recursively delete every node, starting from the "leaves".
37 // A leaf is a node representing the F(0) and F(1) numbers in the 38 // Fibonacci's sequence.
39
40 // NOTE: if the tree is built correctly, every node branches out in 2
41 // directions except for the leaves, which have no links (L AND R are 42 // nullptr). Therefore it's safe to check only one direction, L for 43 // example, to identify the leaves.
44
45
46 void Tree::empty(Node * node) {
47     if (node->L) {                // Not a leaf
48         empty(node->L);
49         empty(node->R);
50         delete node;
51     }
52     else {                        // A Leaf
53         delete node;
54         return;
55     }
56 }
57
58

```

```
59
60 // NOTE: This approach may result in a lot of recursive calls which could be 61 //       too much, but it's very difficult to automate a way to move around a
62 //       tree structure built this way.
63
64 //**
65
66 // It calls itself recursively to generate the sequence until F(n).
67 // When n >= 2, fib(n , ...) causes two calls, generating 2 branches
68 // towards lower numbers in the sequence (via the pointers L and R) until 69 // the calls to fib(0 , ...) or fib(1 , ...).
70 // These calls are the leaves, so they set L and R to nullptr.
71
72
73 void Tree::fib(int n, Node* node) {
74     // Leaves
75     if (n == 0) {
76         node->val = 0;
77         node->L = nullptr;
78         node->R = nullptr;
79         leafs++;
80     }
81     else if (n == 1) {
82         node->val = 1;
83         node->L = nullptr;
84         node->R = nullptr;
85         leafs++;
86     }
87     // n >= 2 - Not leaves
88     else {
89         // Create 2 branches
90         Node * newNodeL = new Node;
91         Node * newNodeR = new Node;
92         size += 2;
93
94         // Connect 2 branches
95         node->L = newNodeL;
96         node->R = newNodeR;
97
98         // Build children nodes
99         fib(n - 1, newNodeL);
100        fib(n - 2, newNodeR);
101        node->val = newNodeL->val + newNodeR->val;
102    }
103 }
104
105
106
107
108
109
110
111
112
113
114
115
116
```

```
117 //**
118
119 // Observation: the depth of the tree is simply equal to n since the 120 // slowest branch (at the left of the root) decreases by 1 until F(0).
121 // BUT if n = 0, a depth of 1 must be set explicitly otherwise the code
122 // will leave it to 0.
123
124
125 void Tree::buildTree(int n) {
126     depth = (n == 0) ? 1 : n;
127     size = 1;
128     root = new Node;           // Start the tree!
129     fib(n, root);             // Build the tree!
130 }
131
132 //**
133 // Recursively proceeds from the root down to the leaves.
134 // Along the way it prints 'val'. This results in the pre-ordered printing.
135
136
137 void Tree::printNode(Node * node) {
138     if (node->L) {              // Not a leaf
139         std::cout << node->val << ' ';
140         printNode(node->L);
141         printNode(node->R);
142     }
143     else                        // A leaf
144         std::cout << node->val << ' ';
145 }
146
147
148
149 //**
150
151 // Prints the tree in pre-order and the information of interest.
152
153
154 void Tree::printTree(void) {
155     std::cout << "Call tree in pre-order: ";
156     printNode(root);
157     std::cout << std::endl;
158     std::cout << "Call tree size: " << size << std::endl;
159     std::cout << "Call tree depth: " << depth << std::endl;
160     std::cout << "Call tree leafs: " << leafs << std::endl;
161 }
```